Sermon Notes

HISTORY OF THE ISLAMIC RELIGION

Muhammad, born in Mecca in 570 A.D., claimed that in a cave he had a vision of Allah and through an angel named Gabriel he received revelations. Later these revelations became the Quran. He began to teach his new religion. His wife, Khadija, a wealthy widow, was his first convert. His cousin and son-in-law, Ali, was also converted and it was Muhammad's desire that Ali become his successor.

In 622 A.D. Muhammad was driven out of Mecca and took flight to Medina. Before leaving Mecca he preached a peaceful coexistence with others. Later, however, his preaching became more aggressive. His writings gradually shifted to Jihad — "holy war." In Medina he converted many and organized the Umma, the community of Islam. Here the first Islamic mosque was built. He organized an army and took the role of prophet, ruler, judge and prayer leader.

Muhammad's radical religion resulted in the establishment of a powerful political theocracy with himself as head. His new "religion" was now to increase by forcible conquest. Muhammad set out to control the Arabian peninsula. He subdued tribes killing thousands of resisters. Plundering city after city he was able to consolidate his power. A way of entering Paradise (as seen by radical Muslims: Sura 4:74 "Let those fight in a way of Allah, who sell this world's life for the hereafter; and whoever fights in the way of Allah, then be he slain or be victorious, we shall grant him a mighty reward." For radical Muslims the guaranteed way of entering Paradise is to die in Jihad — dying while fighting an enemy of Islam.

Through his conquest Muhammad gathered many wives and concubines. When Muhammad died (632 A.D.) a great dispute arose over who would be his successor. Muhammad wanted his son-in-law, Ali, to take his place. However, while his family was busy with his funeral the leaders in Medina elected Abu Bakr as successor. From that time the Islam religion has been marked by two major divisions.

The two major divisions within Islam are the Sunnis and Shiites.

SUNNI —

Most Muslims in all the Mideast are Sunnis — as many as 90%.

Their source of religious authority is the Quran and written traditions.

They are more "orthodox" following traditional beliefs and actions.

They believe in a separation between religious and civil authority.

They believe their leaders should be elected.

They believe the Jihad (holy war) is a spiritual battle.

SHIITE —

Shiites dominate the country of Iran — as many as 93%.

They regard only the Imams (Caliphs) descended directly from Muhammad's son-in-law, Ali, as authority.

They promote the Jihad (holy war) as literal fighting. (See Sura 4:74)

Most Muslim radical terrorists come from the Shiite division, however, some come from other Muslim sects.

In addition to Mecca, Medina and the Dome of the Rock, the Shiites have two other sacred cities — Karbala in Iraq and Meshed in Iran.

Both Sunni and Shiite divisions have many splinter groups.
